

Other problems:

Chronic headache, blurred vision, dizziness, numbness of hands and feet or any other part of the body.

Persistent blurred vision, double vision.

Persistent cough or breathing difficulty or hiccups.

Chest pains, shortness of breath, strong family history of heart disease.

Unexplained abdominal (stomach) pains, diarrhea, constipation, weight loss, liver problems, hiccups.

Persistent weight gain.

Blood disorder (involving red blood cells, white blood cells or platelets)

Recurrent urine infections or difficulty with urination.

Persistent problems related to muscles and joints.

Persistent skin rash or any other disorder of the skin.

Fever, rash, or unexplained cough or other infections.

Persistent fatigue (tired feeling)

Anxiety, irritability, depression

You may need to see one or more of the following specialists depending on your symptoms/complaints

Neurologist (doctor for the brain, spinal cord and nerves).

Ophthalmologist (doctor for the eyes).

Pulmonary specialist (doctor for the lung).

Cardiologist (doctor for the heart).

Gastroenterologist (doctor specializing in disorders of the stomach, intestines, colon, liver, pancreas).

Endocrinologist (doctor specializing in disease of the glands) or gynecologist (doctor specializing in disease of the uterus, ovaries, and breasts): to be screened for glandular disorders (Cushing's syndrome, polycystic ovary syndrome, thyroid disease).

Hematologist/Oncologist (doctor specializing in blood disorders)

Urologist (doctor specializing in disorders of the prostate and bladder).

Rheumatologist (doctor specializing in joints and muscles).

Dermatologist (doctor for skin diseases).

Infectious diseases specialist (doctor for infectious diseases)

Have your doctor review the whole checklist from the home page to be sure every system is covered.

Psychiatrist (doctor for brain function)